Co-President’s Message

It’s been a long winter, but it looks like spring is finally here. Cold weather did not keep League members and guests from attending our annual Legislators Brunch. Many thanks to Kathy and Paul Fennelly for hosting and to Representatives Garballey and Rogers and Senator Friedman for speaking with us. We had a great turnout and fantastic food. This shows how engaged we are with our legislators and how much we care about issues happening locally and in our state.

While Candidates Night was another successful event, it was a bit disappointing that we had few candidates for town-wide office, especially when there were open seats. In years past, we would have to fine-tune the script to be sure we could squeeze into a cablecast time frame because of the number of people running. I also noticed few contested precincts for Town Meeting seats. I applaud people who ran, but also recognize that it is healthy when there is strong interest in holding a local government office. It could be a good challenge for the LWVA to find ways to encourage more people to run both for town-wide office and Town Meeting – something we could put on our agenda for next year.

Looking forward to seeing everyone in June for our annual meeting!

Initial Free Consultation for League Members
Arlington High School Building Forum

By Nancy Gray

I went to the forum at Town Hall on Wednesday, April 4, about our old high school. It was one of several that the Town of Arlington has held to help residents decide to either rebuild Arlington High School or renovate it. The forum included a tour, an explanation about the Massachusetts board (the Massachusetts School Building Authority) that recommends classroom sizes and many, many parameters new high schools need — and more important, it helps with paying for it if it is to their recommendations — which seems logical to me. Rebuilding seems to be winning out. The meeting was quite well attended. Good questions were asked afterwards but only one woman seemed to think the old building should be retained and fixed up.

The architects showed slides and described seven different ways the school could be rebuilt. Then they put the plans on foam core on easels around the room, with details. They gave everybody in the audience three sticky colored circles. We were to put our circles on the plans we liked best.

The total rebuild, six stories high, on the grass meadow in front of the current high school didn’t get many circles — too urban was the general opinion. Notable about building that one was that the existing high school could carry on and be torn down later.

Interesting to me was that all models have six floors. So why the fuss about that plan? The new school will be built on the same hill. It does keep “pods” together: humanities, science, maker space, theater, better gyms, and so on. There are two old parts of the high school that may be kept in the rebuild.

There is an issue of site contamination once the asphalt is broken up for rebuild. The thought was that the bogland behind the high school could get a different drainage and be useful for biology studies.

Matthew Janger, Principal of AHS, talked for quite a while about his excitement about the project — and some dread, of course.

Legislators Brunch Informs Voters

By Kim Haase

Kathy and Paul Fennelly welcomed all of Arlington's state legislators, many League members and friends, and members of the public to their home for the LWVA's annual Legislators Brunch on Sunday, April 8. As usual, everyone enjoyed a delicious potluck brunch, followed by a session with our legislators.

After brunch, Co-President Carolyn Parsons thanked the Fennellys for hosting. Colleen Kirby thanked the legislators for passing the criminal justice reform bill, which was then on Governor Charlie Baker's desk (he later signed it).

State Senator Cindy Friedman reported on the busy year she has had since the end of July, when she was elected to the seat formerly held by the late Ken Donnelly. Sen. Friedman was especially glad to have passed bail reform, one of Sen. Donnelly's signature issues. She is also focusing on programs that divert people with substance abuse and mental health issues from the criminal justice system into treatment: 70% of substance abusers have underlying mental health issues. She is the Senate chair of the Substance Abuse, Mental Health and Recovery Committee, working on rewriting an opioid bill. Other issues she is working on are the $15 minimum wage and wage theft.

State Representative Dave Rogers, who represents Precincts 2, 4, 8, 10, and 12 in Arlington, is in his third term, which he considers his most productive yet. He wrote the marijuana legalization bill that was then passed by the voters as a ballot question. The legislature has been revising the bill; of 14 changes he proposed, 7 passed. Rep. Rogers was also involved with the criminal justice reform bill, focusing on raising the larceny threshold, bail reform, reform of solitary confinement, and ending some mandatory minimum sentences.

State Representative Sean Garballey, who represents the other 16 Arlington precincts, is celebrating his 10th year in the House (he was elected in a special election in March 2008). His main issue for many years has been restorative justice, which is included in the current reform bill. He commended the advocacy of the LWVMA's criminal justice specialists -- currently Colleen Kirby, formerly Patti Muldoon. He hopes to pursue compassionate release (medical parole for terminally ill prisoners to better treatment facilities). Other issues he is working on include allowing students with intellectual disabilities to attend college; an energy bill to move to 100% renewable energy, which won't pass this session because of opposition by the utilities; the Extreme Risk Protection Order bill (ERPO, also called "red flag"), which may well pass; and paid family and medical leave.

The legislators then answered questions.

What are the chances of reviving the Equal Rights Amendment? Is anything going on at the state level? Sen. Friedman said that women's rights issues are playing out on the individual policy level, for example, with sexual harassment laws and the Protect Access to Confidential Healthcare (PATCH) Act, recently passed and signed. Rep. Rogers cited the recently passed Pregnant Workers Fairness Act (PWFA), which requires employers to make reasonable accommodations for pregnancy, which is not a disability. He got 110 cosponsors on the PWFA, making its passage possible -- he has learned never to be in his office, but always to collaborate with other legislators.

How does the criminal justice reform bill deal with the fact that opioid use disorder is a chronic condition? Sen. Friedman replied that treatment includes redesigned mental health and substance abuse facilities in communities, along with treatment teams (physicians, social workers, etc.) that support all aspects of the patient's care, including treatment and counseling. The big issue will be funding. They are trying both to add funding and to use accountable care organizations that get per capita funding.

How can the legislature deal with the Governor's proposal to pass pipeline costs to consumers and to classify methane as renewable energy? Rep. Garballey said that he asked the chair of the committee to stop this definition of a natural resource. An amendment to the budget could write this into law, but it would be better if the House took up the Senate's climate change bill (which is not likely to happen this session, because an energy bill was passed last session). Rep. Rogers said that courts have ruled that utilities can't pass on pipeline costs to ratepayers, and that the last energy bill had some good things in it: wind development, fixing more gas leaks. Sen. Friedman said that the Governor had conceded that gas was not renewable and was amenable to codification of that definition. She and Rep. Rogers noted that criminal justice reform had taken 10 years of concerted voter pressure, and that a comprehensive energy bill would require disparate advocacy groups to unite behind it, along with voters.

What should we voters focus our advocacy efforts on? Sen. Friedman suggested getting the energy bill being worked on in the Senate to increase the target percentage of renewables from 1% to 3% per year. Rep. Garballey suggested the foundation budget review, especially with regard to special education. Rep. Rogers suggested the bills on the minimum wage, paid family leave, and the Fair Share amendment; if the legislature passes them, they won't need to go to the voters. He hoped people would advocate against the bill that would cut the sales tax. The Supreme Judicial Court will be ruling on the constitutionality of the Fair Share amendment; it may rule that it can't earmark the tax for education and transportation, or it may rule against the entire amendment.

Will the Healthy Incentives Program (fruits and vegetables as part of SNAP) continue? Rep. Garballey said it's included in the supplemental budget; it was so popular that it ran out of money.
Our Legislators Brunch: Some History

By Colleen Kirby

For several years, the League of Women Voters of Arlington has held an annual February or April brunch on a Sunday at Kathy Fennelly’s house. Kathy and Janice Bakey are responsible for the baked ham and punch, and Kathy and her husband Paul are always gracious hosts. The brunch is a potluck so members who enjoy showing off their favorite dish have this opportunity to shine. We start off with brunch and a general networking so individuals can speak to their legislators one on one, or with other members whom they may not have seen in a while. Then we retire to the living room, where the legislators get the comfy chairs and the audience hears about what they’ve been doing over the year and what they hope to do in the future. There is always an in-depth question and answer period.

Over the years there have been many hostesses, including Bernice Jones, Peg Spengler, Carma Forgie, Meredith Zona, and Kathy Fennelly.

Kathy took over hosting the brunch from Carma Forgie over 10 years ago. Carma’s house had a fantastic view of Boston. She used real china and silver and glass wine glasses. Kathy said, “The food has always been wonderful and the conversations with legislators interesting.” Our legislators always make sure to attend this brunch as it has been such a long tradition in Arlington. We give the legislators several weekends to choose from to make sure they can all attend.

Some Highlights

By Colleen Kirby

Ms. Berenson is also a senior attorney at the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court.

Ms. Berenson started off the history of the Woman Suffrage movement with the Grimke sisters of South Carolina, who came to Massachusetts to speak out about abolition in 1837, challenging the boundaries of what women could do, and writing many tracts on the Condition of Women and on Abolition. She told us about the first Convention on Women’s Rights held in Seneca Falls under the aegis of Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony, then argued that the real start was in 1850 at the Movement for Women’s Rights in Worcester where 1000 women from 11 states created a structure and committees to support a grassroots initiative to push for women’s rights. This movement held a convention annually. Lucy Stone (first Massachusetts woman to obtain a college degree) was one of the major leaders, and Sojourner Truth spoke at the inaugural meeting. The movement was put on hold during the Civil War.

After the war, the fight over extending the vote to black men with the 15th amendment split the women’s movement, with Lucy Stone supporting it and both Stanton and Anthony opposing it. This schism led to Lucy Stone being ignored when the 6-volume History of Women’s Suffrage was composed by Stanton and Anthony, and thus to our current lack of knowledge of her key role in women’s suffrage. After the 15th amendment was ratified in 1870, the abolitionists did not all support enfranchising women, which delayed women getting the right to vote.

Lucy Stone persevered and helped form American Women Suffrage Association groups in every state. She also wrote a weekly “Women’s Journal” from 1870-1920. One co-founder of AWSA, Josephine St. Pierre Ruffin, edited her own journal “The Women’s Era” from 1886-1897. She was the first African-American woman to publish a newspaper for black women. Despite the strong campaigning in the East, it was Wyoming that first allowed women to vote in 1869. In Massachusetts, women fought for and gained the right to vote only for School Committee members in 1879, then in 1895 they lost a ballot measure to vote in local and municipal elections.

Lucy Stone and AWSA expanded their coalition to unions and men’s groups, marched in parades, gave speeches on soapboxes to attract new converts, heckled politicians against women’s voting rights, and went door-to-door canvassing. Nevertheless they lost in 4 Northeastern states. So they changed their strategy to lobbying at the federal level for an amendment, under the inspiration of Alice Paul and her radicals in the National Women’s Party. In 1918, the 19th amendment passed in the House but failed in the Senate by two votes. At this point, the movement targeted Senators who had voted against, primarily Sen. John Weeks of Massachusetts and a Senator in New Jersey, both of whom were defeated. In 1920, the 19th amendment passed after 80 years of campaigning.

The League of Women Voters was born out of the suffrage movement to educate women about how to use their newly won rights. Although women gained the right to vote in 1920, it wasn’t until 1950 that they gained the right to serve on juries in Massachusetts.

Barbara Berenson says that what she learned from writing her book and researching this history was how important it is to Speak Out, Organize, Build Coalitions, Persuade, Protest, and Persist.

We heard from many inspiring women politicians: Lisa Wong, former Mayor of Fitchburg; Ruthanne Fuller, first woman mayor of Newton; Councilor Sarai Rivera, first Latina Councilor in Worcester; Mayor Yvonne Spicer, first mayor, first woman mayor, first black mayor of Framingham; and Congresswoman Niki Tsongas. Basically they all espoused that “The agenda changes when women are in power,” as so well said by Mayor Ruthanne Fuller.

I also live-tweeted the final speaker, Professor Daniel Ziblatt of Harvard University, who spoke about his new book, How Democracies Die (with Steven Levitsky). But you’ll have to go to @kirby_cho on Twitter to see that.

Thanks to our Rides to the Polls volunteers!

On Town Election Day, April 7, we offered rides to the polls. Several of you offered to serve as drivers.

Nobody took us up on our offer, but since my number was in the Advocate, I got several calls from people wondering what their precinct was and where to vote.

So we did community service.
